Hello,

Excellent piece of research, I’m partically interested in the model side of things. I was just wondering if it would be possible to include an image of the FE model (cross-sectional view) to better understand where shell elements were used and where solid elements were used. This would allow readers to better understand of how this compares to some of the current best practices, even if they don't have access to ANSYS to load your model from the supplementary data.

Cheers,

Vincent.
